Social Security News

by Mary Booker

Almost 12 million people 65 and over are now receiving social security benefits. Are you one of them. If not, should you be?

In years past, most people over 65 couldn't receive any social security benefits if they earned more than $2000 in a year. That's changed now.

Under the law as it now stands, a worker over 65 can have fairly substantial earnings and still receive some social security benefits for the year.

How much can you earn and still receive benefits? Depends on how much your benefit is and whether any of your dependents also qualify for benefits.

Only one way to make sure you are not losing some benefits. If you are over 65, still working, and have never applied for social security, do it now.

The folks in the social security office at 112 Langhorne Rd., Lynchburg, Va., will be glad to help you. If you find it difficult to get to the office, give them a call. The number is VI 7-8856.

For further information, or assistance, see your social security representative at the Courthouse in Appomatox on the fourth Monday of each month from 10 a.m. until 12.

Mrs. Harwood Hix is well again after suffering a wrenched back. This is his vacation week, and they will visit Salisburg, Md. and has been slowly making its way around the globe, reports the American Medical Association.

Just how serious the outbreak will be no one can predict. But at any rate we are well braced. Physicians have been alerted, public health programs outlined and stocks of anti - influenza vaccine built up. In fact, because of the vaccine, American Medical Association leaders think the disease may not be as widespread or devastating this winter as the epidemic of 1957-58.

In the average healthy person Asian flu means four or five days of weakness and misery, just like any other type of flu. But in older people and those with certain chronic disease the flu virus can be deadly. In the five years since Asian flu first appeared in America it has contributed to the deaths of 80,000 Americans. The flu itself usually is not a killer but it weakens the body's defenses against other diseases.

Those with diabetes and with chronic heart, circulatory and kidney diseases are particularly vulnerable. More than half the deaths in previous epidemics were in people with these conditions. Pneumonia also moves in on the heels of influenza frequently.

Those with pulmonary tuberculosis, chronic asthma, chronic bronchitis and other ailments of the lungs and air passages also are particularly endangered by Asian flu.

There is no cure for Asian flu once the disease takes hold. But it can be prevented in many instances by the flu vaccine. Everyone over the age of 65 years needs the vaccine, and particularly is it important to those past 65 years.

It's not safe to depend on vaccine shots from past years and previous cases of the disease do not confer immunity. If you and your family haven't had your flu shots, see your doctor right away and start the immunization procedure.
